NOTE FOR: The Director

Creativity and Ethics SUBJECT:

Last fall, as a result of my concern over the need to maintain our creativity in the face of new restrictions and controls, I commissioned a small group of officers to brainstorm on this/subject. The result was a study entitled "Summary Report -- Two Seminars on Creativity and Ethics in the CIA," which I sent to you in March.

In February, I asked the Deputies to/meet with their operating component chiefs to discuss the findings contained in the study. I wanted to determine the extent to which the findings would receive broader-based agreement and which one's might not lend themselves to Agency-wide implementation.

The DDA's report on discussions He held is attached. In summary, the follwoing views emerged:

1. Innovative Approaches to Decisionmaking

Mixed reaction on whether more authority should be delegated Some felt that they should have more say in hiring, firing, promoting and assigning personnel under their supervision. Feeling was nearly unanimous that vestraints on reprogramming of funds is an obstacle to creativity.

Receptiveness of Management to Innovation Improved Personnel Management

General feeling managers should make a greater effort to keep channels of communication open and recognize a need to commend and acknowledge as well as to condemn.

4. Fostering Creativity

General feeling that we are mable to devote enough time to creative thinking and that the challenge is greater today because there are more constraints.

5. Ethical Vssues

Unanimous feeling that a "Cannon of Ethics" is not a good idea and unnecessary; this subject was viewed as a personal issue for which the example of good/leadership would be most effective.
